Your ALL-NEW Weekly World News

NEW EDITOR Jeff Rovin, seen here at the White House, is a presidential confidant and the author of more than 90 New York Times bestselling thrillers.

WEEKLY WORLD NEWS has always worked hard to inform and entertain, to provide the people of this country with a weekly newspaper that tells the news honestly and courageously. Special interests have never been allowed to interfere with our work as they do with other newspapers.

Now more than ever it is important to reject the so-called news we are being fed by the mainstream press. National, international and even interplanetary events are being suppressed. Newspapers, television and the Internet are feeding us what the dolphins call 'mwap . . . mwapshh . . . mary' — literally, "Lies as deep as the ocean." Powerful men and women have decided that we are too simple-minded to deal with the truth. We say N-O.

Weekly World News intends to flex its journalistic muscles in the fight for your First Amendment right to know. We have expanded our bureaus in cities around the world and staffed them with the top reporters in every field. We will confront newsmakers wherever they are — or wherever they are hiding — and squeeze the Juice of Truth from their reluctant lips.

When amazing creatures emerge from hiding, we'll bring you the photographs.

When science breeds incredible mutations or invents devices that can improve — or destroy — the very fabric of existence, we'll have all the details.

When the government tries to cover up visits from space aliens and time travelers, we'll be there. Weekly World News will even tell you what investments, if any, people from the future are making in the stock market. You won't find that in Forbes!

In short, we are not here to spin the news or score points with the rich and the mighty. We are here to serve you a weekly world of truth.

Pick us up. We will never let you down.

— Jeff Rovin, Editor-in-Chief

COMA SURVIVOR REVEALS...

WHO IS MEETING WITH GOD SHOCKS EXPERTS

By HOLLY PAYNE
Wichita, Wash.

MORRIS Earl Lyman, a lineman for the county, has quite a story to tell. After being electrocuted on a phone pole outside the Come On Inn Steakhouse and falling into a coma, his friends and family feared the worst.

"When they brought him in his head looked like a baked potato that popped in a microwave," said Lori Lyman. Once a tearful, mourning wife she is now sobbing with joy. "His recovery is a miracle, I swear."

"It wasn't the only miracle," Morris said from his hospital bed at the Crimson Medical Center. "And honestly — don't swear. God doesn't like it. Nothing serious, but for each infraction you get some minor punishment, like a runny nose or watery eyes or an itchy neck." How does Morris know? That has to do with the other miracle he referred to. Morris claims to have gone to Heaven and spoken with God.

"My journey to the afterlife started with the usual stuff," Morris said. He was sitting up in bed and holding his wife's hand. He didn't look much the worse for wear from his electrocution — proof, he claims, of his contact with the Almighty.

"There was the tunnel of white light, clouds, voices of relatives who passed away, Mama Cass singing to me — that sort of thing. But once you get through the Pearly Gates it's like being the nicest park you ever saw. There are hills and waterfalls with beautiful shining paths lined with flowers.

"But I'm getting ahead of myself," Morris said. "St. Peter greeted me with a smile and a fold-out map. I walked past him, my feet barely sinking in the soft, cool clouds. There were angels everywhere. They had wings and halos but I didn't recognize any of them. When I reached the golden path — that was when I saw the folk without wings, what they call the soul brothers and soul sisters. Some of them were really familiar. Heck, I had only taken a few steps when a heavily accented voice just behind me said, 'Excuse me.' I turned around and there was Pope John Paul II.

"He couldn't have been happier. He just seemed so glad to be able to walk and talk and breathe normally. He was chatting about fashion with Al Bundonis, the famed women's clothier."

These simple joys seemed shared by everyone Morris saw. "Christopher Reeve was overjoyed to be able to walk again. He was missing his family but he said he was able to watch them through Heaven's super-premium cable system. The big surprise, though was seeing Richard Nixon. I thought for sure he wouldn't be there.

"But Johnnie Cochran himself told me the president was truly repentant for the wrongs he had committed. I tried to convince Mr. Nixon to come out from behind the rock where he was hiding. But he said there were a lot of Vietnam vets coming through these days and he didn't want to have to spend eternity explaining himself."

Lori was surprised by the presence of the infamous "if the glove doesn't fit you must acquit" lawyer who got O.J. off.

"So was I," admitted Morris. "But Jerry Orbach — you know the guy from Law & Order — told me that Cochran did a really good job for his client. It wasn't his fault the prosecution messed up. Then we all started to where John Lennon and George Harrison were going to put on a concert, Frank Perdue had one food concession, Colonel Sanders had another, and they were teasing each other about whose breasts were more tender. That seemed to embarrass Fay Wray."

According to Morris, he never did get to see the concert because Archangel Michael said he was needed in the Hall of Fate.

blink of an eye. Imagine the Lincoln Memorial about 10 times bigger and you have an idea about what I was standing in front of." Terri Schiavo skipped past me." Morris revealed. "She was coming out of the hall, scarfing down a burger.

She'd put on some weight and looked really happy. Anyway, I went in expecting to see this big and bright white light. But it was just a room. A really giant one, with angels hovering all around like Christmas decorations, only for real. And in the center was this marble desk and a man with a really long beard sitting behind it. He was going over paperwork. Parchment work, actually.

"'You don't belong here,' the old man suddenly said to me. And I figured, 'Uh-oh. He found out about those dirty magazines I have under the mattress and I'm going to the blazes.'"

Lori looked at him. "What dirty magazines?"

"Not now, sweet potato," Morris said, wincing and adding, "DOH!" He went on. "Anyway, this bearded gentleman said to me, 'We made a mistake. That shoch we sent along the phone line was meant for someone else. So we're sending you back.'"

"Thank you, your Grace," I said.

me. "The blast was accidentally sent toward Mt. Rainier." The man shrugged. "Sometimes that happens."

After instructing Morris on the ways of virtue to ensure his return at "some later date," the lineman was zapped back into his body at the hospital.

"I am just so grateful to God for returning my husband," Lori said. "I think it's pretty amazing that a man who never traveled more than forty miles from his hometown has just taken the greatest journey of all. "She squeezed her husband's hand.

"It's a miracle, like I said, and I hope to make the trip again one day." He winked. "Not too soon.

THIRD GENDER IN OZARKS!

By [redacted]
Ponca, Ark.

IN AN astounding new development in the fields of human biology and genetics, a third gender has been discovered in the Ozarks.

"It's not just man and woman in the part of the country," observed Cory Stickleback, author of the best-selling novel, Hillbilly Billy. Stickleback came upon the new sex while doing research for his upcoming book, Backwoods Bobo. The gender has never before been observed by outsiders, though apparently it's been a fixture for many years in an area near an obscure town called Ponca, nestled in the Ozark mountain range.

"At first I thought it was just this one bizarre mutation," recalled Stickleback. "But I soon noticed there were dozens and dozens of the suckers."

The new gender, called "[redacted]" ("Ozarkus" backwardly), is extremely distinctive in appearance. As Stickleback describes them, they feature "uterus, egg-shaped bodies, similar to Humpty Dumpty's. They appear to be completely [redacted] except for one 'unibrow' in place of two eyebrows. A large marsupial pouch in the belly area is used to transport their young and their pet-pets, and store their favorite food — rhubarb."

Stickleback secretly observed the Skreaux engaged in several unique activities including:

- Spending hours at a time yodeling their favorite song — Frank Sinatra's "My Way."
- Engaging in an elaborate 27-step secret handshake

How did this third gender develop? "Centuries of inbreeding," stated Dr. Kooble. "Oh, sure, they started out as the hillbillies we all know — the quilting, folk-song-humming grandma sharing a leaky log cabin with the barefoot, floppy-hat-wearing moonshiner. But after generations of cousins marrying sisters, fathers marrying daughters, and mothers marrying uncles — well, this is the result."

The Skraxos primarily inhabit the backwoods portions of the Ozarks. They've taken over all the old stills, where they earn their living by the traditional task of brewing and selling moonshine to the locals. Remarkably resistant to the modernizing influences of the outside world, the Skraxos seem quite content keeping to themselves. In doing so, they have evolved their own language, currency, music, art, and even humor.

Sticklebach observed very little interaction between the Skraxos and other Ozarkers, as both groups consider one another to be "nuts." The Skraxos are, however, in active negotiations to appear on The Jerry Springer Show, for a theme program titled You Think Your Family's Wacky!

Several of the world's most prominent scientists are on their way to the Ozarks to more thoroughly research the Skraxos. And one of the largest on-line dating services is offering any Skraxo a three-month free membership.

Dear Editor, Hahaha-hahahaha! I've never seen anything funnier than the picture you ran of President George W. Bush smoking a joint in the Oval Office (Apr. 18, 2005).

No wonder he never makes any sense and always seems so calm and relaxed — he's high as a kite!

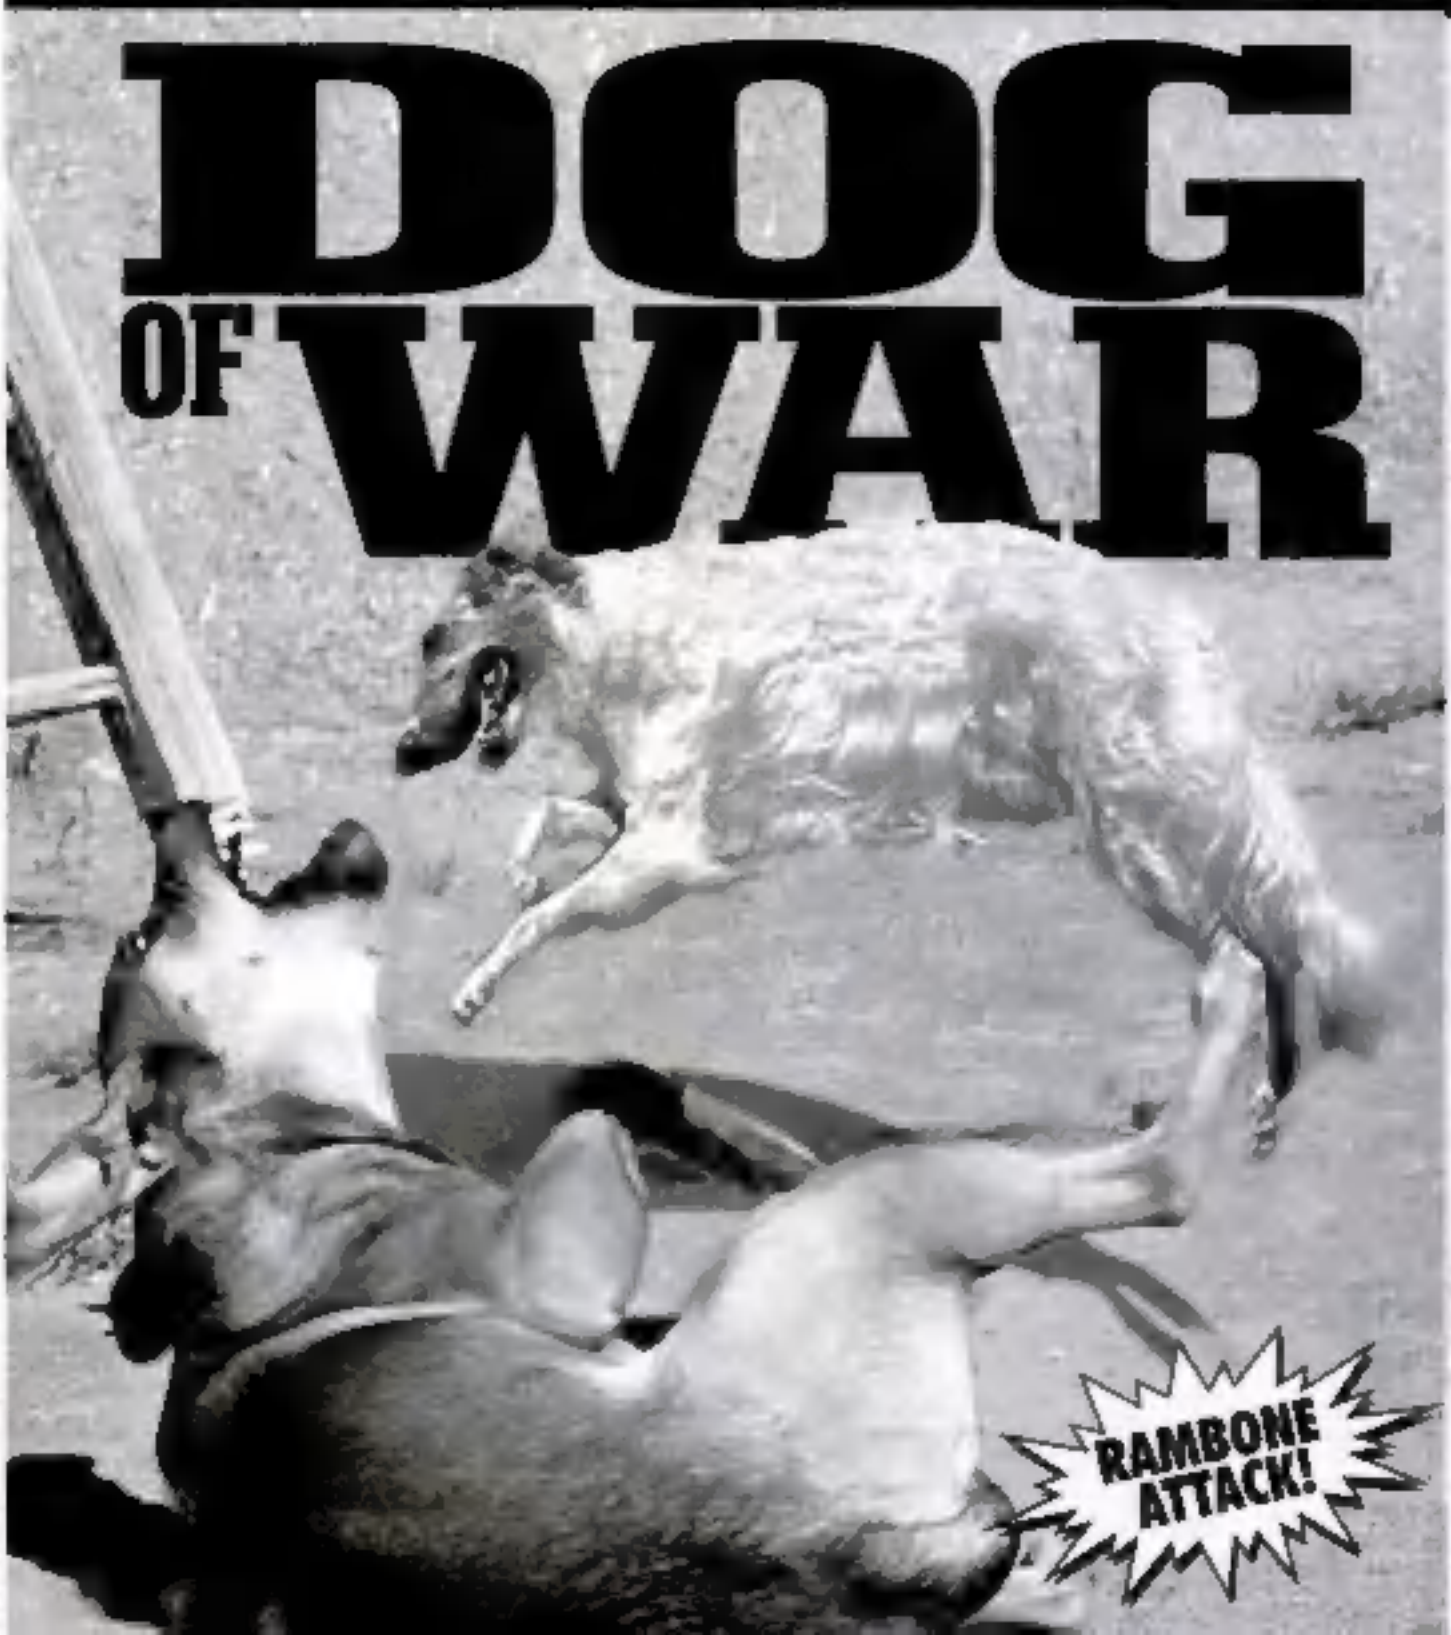
RENEGADE POOCH STUNS

DOG OF WAR



PENTAGON!

By DICK SIEGEL
Kabul, Afghanistan

LAST WEEK, war-weary Allied troops were being entertained at a special USO show when a very lonely and long-lost Russian super-soldier surfaced. Only he wasn't an ordinary dogface.

Lt. Major Rusty O'Hara of the 82nd Airborne was sipping an ice cold pop with his fellow troopers watching The Super Dog Show starring Mr. Parsley — the infamous German shepherd who was banned from dog show competition for steroid use (Weekly World News, April 11).

"We were all recovering from a fire-fight in the mountains and were eager to see the notorious pooch bench press a Humvee," said Lt. Major O'Hara. "There was a chow chow in a tutu coming around for donations. We all kicked in some bucks — the lil' dog was just so cute carrying a bucket in her teeth. Besides, none of us had seen a lady in a dress for a while. Mr. Parsley's handler, Mary Jane Snow, had just given the big fella a biscuit to psych him up when suddenly we found ourselves in the middle of a fur-fight."

As the powerfully built German shepherd bit into his treat, a scrawny, dusty looking borzoi with matted hair leapt onto the stage. The wolfhound snatched the biscuit from Mr. Parsley's mouth.

"The cookie broke mid-section, and the two big dogs just stared at one another," O'Hara recalled. "Then, with a snarl, they dropped the snacks and launched themselves at each other."

The fight was short but vicious. According to videotape footage obtained by Weekly World News, Mr. Parsley ripped into the borzoi but, incredibly, his incisors broke on the scraggly wolfhound's tough hide. The intruder then gripped Mr. Parsley by the tail, swinging him around in circles.

Sources identify the borzoi as Nobyl — a former Soviet super dog code named 'Rambone'!

O'Hara told us. "It was more entertainment than we were expecting."

The dizzy Mr. Parsley went flying. He smashed against the Humvee leaving a dog-sized impression in the hood, then fell limp on top of the little dog in the tutu.

"My cash chow!" Mary Jane screamed as she collected the money that had spilled from the bucket.

Incredibly, the intruder did not run. Realizing that the amazing borzoi was probably hungry, several quick-thinking GIs befriended the dog and fed him. They also fed him information about the dog's former life, which they relayed to us.

The borzoi seemed to enjoy not just the food but the attention. The airmen snapped pictures of themselves with the dog and, during weekly e-mail access, sent the photos home to loved ones.

That's when Global Intelligence Command became involved. The GIC routinely intercepts e-mail from the front for security reasons. They made a startling discovery as they examined the snapshots: The Borzoi dier," said a source at GIC who spoke to us on condition of anonymity.

"Our code name for him was 'Rambone.' For one thing, he possessed remarkable super strength. His mother's genes were mutated by the Chernobyl nuclear disaster in 1986. Instead of giving birth to a litter she produced a single super-pup with the powers and abilities of seven dogs combined. He also received the best training the KGB could provide. They saw him as the father of a race of Soviet super-dogs."

According to our source, Nobyl went undercover during the waning days of the Soviet war in Afghanistan. A remarkable photo obtained by the GIC and published here for the first time showed Nobyl wearing a kaffiyah — an Arab head covering — held together with a rope or fakal. He was firing a Kalashnikov rifle — with his paws!

"After the Soviet withdrawal from the region the remarkable battle hound disappeared," our source went on. "Intelligence reports suggested that he had been wounded covering the retreat of a Soviet mechanized brigade. There were indications that he had disappeared into the frigid mountains: Reports of blood, paw prints, and yellow snow. Rumors reached the GIC that the injured Nobyl had packed his wounds with mud and used fine pine needles and llama wool to stitch himself together. Army veterinarians believe that the dog was able to heal quickly due to his mutated gene structure. I guess he just stayed in the frigid mountains until the new war literally brought him out of the cold."

Within days of his surprise arrival at the USO show, the American air base in Kabul was overrun by agents brandishing dog biscuits and fribees. But, like the good soldier he is, the mighty dog had slipped away during the night. He is believed to be heading for Iraq.

"We hope to find Nobyl and convince him to join the war on terror," said our GIC source. "He would make a wonderful partner for SpyCat."

"We hope he comes back too," said Mary Jane Snow, cradling the shell-shocked chow chow in

Mad DNA SPLICER strikes again!

HE CREATES WORLD'S FIRST . . . SHEEP WOMAN

By RICK SIEGEL
Tales, N.M.

RENEGADE bio-geneticist Dr. Jordan Ellison — whose weird death row Tree-Man mutations was revealed in an exclusive Weekly World News report a few weeks back — has resurfaced. This time he has a new and more bizarre creation: A sheep woman.

"I did her a favor," Dr. Ellison told us from his cell at the Tales sheriff's office. "Miss Hart's life was empty before she met me. Now she has a purpose."

"What she has is a flock of sheep that follows her everywhere, like Lamb Chop on Shari Lewis," Sheriff Merino Sullivan added. "They created quite a scene, playing hide-and-seek around the courthouse."

Sullivan said the strange saga began when Dr. Ellison led us to Dr. Ellison, who was on the F.B.I.'s ten-most-wanted list.

"That crackpot should have stayed 'on the lam' instead of getting 'on the lamb,'" Sullivan remarked.

The strange saga began when Dr. Ellison met 47-year-old socialite Reba Hart at a country fair.

Ellison was working in costume as the convict Rodney Ram, using the disguise to hide from police. He and Miss Hart struck up a conversation when she commented on how authentic his wool was.

"I told her I'd been working so hard I hadn't bathed in weeks," Ellison explained. "She invited me to her estate for a shower and shave and we got to talking. I explained that with the threat of global warming, we have to adapt or perish. She was so impressed that she agreed to set up a laboratory in her basement so I could continue my research. The only problem was, I had no subjects."

Dr. Ellison saw where to get one when he noticed how dry Miss Hart's eyes got in the hot, New Mexico sun. He altered the "Y" chromosome in human DNA to a "W" or "wool" chromosome. Then he put the mutant gene in Miss Hart's eye-drops, turning them to ewe-drops.

The transformation happened quickly. Within hours the woman's curly gray hair had turned to curly white wool. At first she thought the change was becoming, a result of the antiwrinkle vitamin C injections she had been taking. When the wool started sprouting on her arms and legs, she panicked.

"I spend thousands of dollars a year on hair removal procedures," she said, her sheepish lips struggling to form words. "Now I've got white clumps all over my baaaaaady!"

Those were the last words Miss Hart uttered before losing the power of speech. She is now [illegible] Hart. Her were once tiny hands and feet are now pink, demure hooves. Her pink nose has turned black.

"She is now fully woolly and we're going to prosecute this madman Ellison," said her roguish brother Burton — who admits there's poetic justice in what happened.

"They're all insane," Ellison complained. "In her former life Babs was frivolous and shallow. Now she is helping to prepare humanity for the coming cataclysm. If there is a new ice age she will be able to knit sweaters from her own wool. She will help people sleep by letting include several rams who bolted from Old MacDougal's Petting Zoo when the mutant heiress walked by. They frolicked on the town green where they were joined by over a dozen lambs from a nearby meadow. Eventually they ran off, most of them carrying little hitchhikers. Their owner said. "This is a disaster. With my name, what else can I do for a living?"

In his cell while awaiting extradition to Carlson, Ariz., Dr. Ellison had no regrets about gene-splicing the former sweater girl socialite into a woolly wonder. "One day mankind will thank me for what I did here," he said. "My experiments will lead to a new

HOMELAND SECURITY CHIEF DECLARES 'WAR ON TERRIERS'

By BERNIE PYLE

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Homeland Security Chief Michael Chertoff is extending the war on terror to include a new foe - terriers!

Chertoff said that with hostile activity by Al Qaeda diminishing, it was a perfect time to expand the war on terrorism to other groups. When asked at a press conference, "Why terriers?" Chertoff replied, "People always misunderstood the President, because of his Southern drawl, it was always a war on 'terr,' not 'terror.' And 'terrier' begins with 'terr,' doesn't it? So now we're going to go after those vicious, mean little dogs.

"After we've eradicated them, we're going to go after other 'terr' targets, including terrapins, terrafrys and anything terra cotta."

As might be expected, terrier owners are furious at the new policy.

"This should give everybody pause," says Harold Grimsley, who owns three terriers. "Or paws, pardon the pun. Why doesn't Chertoff go after the real problem: Bulldogs!"

But terrier owners aren't the only group who think this new act is for the dogs. Terry McAuliffe, head of the Democratic Party, says "Clearly this is over reaching, and desperate tactics by a man simply looking for new enemies, in order to hold onto his job."

When told of these comments, Chertoff said, "Did you say TERRy

JUDGE RULES 'JURY OF PEERS' MUST CONSIST OF OTHER CRIMINALS

By SCOTT STEVENS

TAILGATE, Kent. – A judge recently ruled that a man suspected of stealing cars was entitled to a jury of his peers – namely, other car thieves!

Hank "Jump Start" Ford, 29, was arrested and charged with stealing a 1998 red Camaro. The case took an unusual twist when Ford's lawyer, Fred Scottsboro, filed a motion saying that, according to the Constitution, Ford was entitled to a trial by "a jury of his peers" – and that meant other car thieves!

At first Judge Hank Goss was inclined to deny the motion. "Ford hasn't been convicted yet. Therefore a 'jury of his peers' would NOT consist of other car thieves."

But Scottsboro replied: "Oh, my client stole the car. Your Honor. Definitely. That's precisely why he SHOULD be judged by his peers – other car thieves.

Surprisingly, Judge Goss agreed.

The county issued jury summons to all convicted car thieves in a 50-mile radius, including some who were still in prison.

Ford took the stand and testified that he stole the car because he "really liked it," and "couldn't afford to buy one." The jurors nodded sympathetically. After both sides rested, the jury deliberated for 12 minutes before finding Ford "Not Guilty."

Afterward, Judge Goss, the prosecutor and even Scottsboro

PLUS-SIZED ATHLETES COMPETE IN 'BIG' GAMES

By LUCY LIPTON
Athens, Greece

HERE'S good news for grossly overweight athletes — now there's a competition exclusively designed for people who tip the scales at 400-plus pounds!

The first International "Olipids," familiarly known as the Fatty Games, will be held in Greece in 2006. They will feature such events as the 25-meter walk, the low jump and something called "freestyle floating."

"It's unfair the way fat athletes are shut out of other athletic competitions," said Karl Torpos, chairman of the Fatty Games committee. "Just because they can't run as fast as those skinny athletes or jump as high doesn't mean they shouldn't be allowed to compete."

The Fatty Games will allow chubby competitors to challenge each other in low-stress sports that don't require a lot of movement. There will be frequent sandwich breaks, and competitors in foot races will be given the option of riding electric carts.

It is hoped that Kirstie Alley, star of TV's Fat Actress, will light the ceremonial torch for the games.

Jack Meffler, another plus-size athlete, is working on the "Rising from an Easy Chair" competition.

"It's definitely not as easy as it looks," Meffler said. "You try and get out of that chair, and sometimes, you just can't do it." Many competitors are unable to even complete the event.

Europe are giving the U.S. some heavy competition.

It seems the obesity epidemic has finally reached across the Atlantic. Thirty-one percent of pasta-loving Italian citizens are now obese; Spain and England now have obesity epidemics of their own.

But Torpor argues the Fatty Games simply provide a venue for super-size sportsmen to engage in a little competition. "Just because they are too fat to participate in real athletic games doesn't mean they should be excluded from all such competitions," he said. "It's a way for them to say, 'I want to compete, too, as long as I don't have to exert myself too much and I get to have some sandwiches.'"

LO-CARB [illegible] 'N' SNIFF COOKIES

By DEBBIE PAKATIA

LANDON, Colo. – Tired of making tasteless, fat-, sugar-, cholesterol- and carb-free cookies? A new mail-chain bakery plans to sell scratch 'n' sniff cookies that smell like these fat-inducing, heart damaging, homemade cookies mom used to make, but with none of the inherent danger.

"Nobody can resist the smell of cookies right out of the oven," says Peter Turner, owner of Have Another bakery. "But everybody seems to be able to resist the taste. Lately. Our business is going to the dogs. Literally. We donate more cookies to the animal shelters than we sell."

Have Another will open bakeries around the country to offer the scratch 'n' sniff cookie. "We envision mail workers lining up to take our cookies with them. No guilt, and all the pleasant smells that evoke so much in American minds. They taste like cardboard though. Nobody's going to be tempted to cheat, that's the whole point. People will learn quickly to satisfy their unhealthy cravings with just a sniff."

Investors in the company say it's a sure thing. While Americans want to be more health conscious, many of them simply can't muster it. The cookies can only be scratched so many times before the smell wears out, prompting repeat customers. "And what better way to snag them than in the mail. They can take these in the stores with them, whereas they'd usually Cape Canaveral, Fla.

REJOINING the space race after a two-year hiatus, NASA successfully launched the Space Shuttle Atlantis on April 11 and brought it safely back to earth the following day.

"The top secret relaunch of the space shuttle was a complete triumph," said Chief Engineer Gale Gordon Jr. "There were only two glitches. First, the launch was not supposed to take place for another six weeks. Second, instead of our trained and dedicated crew it was piloted by the flamboyant self-promoter your newspaper calls 'Miss Adventure.'"

"It wasn't self-promotion, it was simply fitting that I take a trip on board the space shuttle Atlantis."

Life has its ups and downs but no one has had as many ups and downs as Andrews. In a few short months the 29-year-old hairdresser-turned-adventurer has traveled up Mount Everest on a monk coat and high heels, voyaged down to the bottom of the sea in search of priceless pearls, and journeyed even further down to the very center of the earth.

"Up and down, up and down — I feel like a pole vaulter," laughs Andrews. "Adventure is like a Brad Pitt film festival. Even the bad ones leave you breathless. As soon as I finish one journey I can't wait to take another."

Yet Miss Adventure's latest escapade was extreme even for her. Normally, Andrews, 42, had driven from their modest home in Teaneck, N.J., to the Florida Space Center. They arrived on a Saturday afternoon and immediately went to see Romano's nephew, Dr. P.T. Dimercan, 42, launch supervisor of the Atlantis.

Andrews hadn't visited the Space Center since the Clinton administration. He was pleased that the military personnel seemed to remember him.

"We walked into the mess hall — which was actually quite tidy, I thought — and no less than 20 men abruptly got up and left. They were probably rushing to get ready for a night at the Space Cruiser Ramada Grill, which is where I had met them last time. I was so happy I'd dressed for the occasion."

Miss Adventure had extradition for the visit.

"The whole Cape Canaveral, JFK, space race ambiance simply screamed this to me and I decided to go with a look inspired by that decade in general, and Laura Petrie on The Dick Van Dyke Show in particular. That's how I happened to be wearing a bright yellow blouse and hot pink capri pants," Miss Adventure told Chief Engineer Gordon Ti

After lunch, Donovan offered to show his guests the space shuttle. Andrews thought it would prove impossible to breach security in order to view the shuttle, which had recently been rolled from the Vehicle Assembly Building in preparation for launch. Donovan assured him that it was really a very simple matter.

"He told me all the guys took their girlfriends to see it and that, dressed as I was, I'd simply be mistaken for his girlfriend. As it turned out, he was right. Within minutes of approaching the shuttle we were inside and he was explaining the entire procedure for sending the craft into space. And then, of course, he accidentally pushed the new silly button that launched us."

Miss Adventure later learned that it requires 200 million pounds of thrust from the shuttle's solid rocket boosters to achieve takeoff. "Thank God I was wearing flats." Donovan [illegible]

It was the first time I was frightened by anything like that," Miss Adventure declared. "I was smashed against the seat. Every part of me was jiggling like Roger Moore in Moonraker. I became very aware of excess fat on my neck and waist. I vowed that when I returned — if I returned — that flab had to go."

After the boosters were jettisoned and the brutal acceleration stopped, the Atlantis auto matically settled into orbit. That offered Andrews the chance to make several astonishing observations.

"The view was simply stunning. I'm not quite body art and I must say that our planet is a whole lot prettier without all those screaming lines you see on maps. However, Walt Disney was wrong. The world is not a cornucopia of color. It's mostly dark blue, brown and murky green. A few primary shades would be nice — some red ski wear caps or a nice yellow sash around the equator. Maybe a [illegible] the earth's atmosphere at a height of 400,000 feet. The ship's autopilot managed a smooth touchdown after which the three strangers, as Gordon called them, were immediately taken into custody. "I asked if I could be Shrimp," Andrews continued. "I like a challenge."

NASA threatened to throw the book at the reluctant astronauts, even though they had established several records in orbit — not all of them scientific. However, after a long closed door meeting with the top brass, all charges were dropped.

Besieged by reporters as he and Dee Dee prepared to drive home to New Jersey — where Miss Adventure said his first stop would be the gym — nor hero was coy when it came to explaining the military's abrupt change of heart.

"Don't ask and I won't tell," he winked.

MAN ELECTROCUTED BY LIGHTNING BUG

Experts shocked by freak firefly fatality

By BECKY TODD
Nottinghamshire, England

A BRITISH man died instantly when he was bitten by a lightning bug and electrocuted, say medical authorities.

"[redacted] never seen anything like it before," said Dr. Rory Kincaid, head etymologist at the Insect Disease Institute of England (IDIE). "It's really quite shocking."

The bug fatality occurred when Geoffrey St John, 32, was out in his Nottinghamshire garden with his twin toddlers catching the sparkly [redacted] in jars.

"They were having a delightful time," recalled Victoria St. John, the man's 28-year-old widow. "They were romping around the lawn at dusk when the lightning bugs appear. The children were running after them with peanut butter containers I'd cleaned out [redacted] punctured [redacted] in the lids.

"Geoffrey was laughing and chasing about. It was the picture of family bliss I'd always dreamed of."

But then the [redacted] doll spotted another blinking bug and ran after it. Never suspecting that he had only minutes left to live.

"Geoffrey caught the insect in his hand and was about to give it to Audrey, our little girl, when he said 'Ouch. It stung me.' I thought he was kidding because everyone catches lightning bugs and they're harmless."

But just moments later Geoffrey's face, arms and legs began to swell like a balloon. He dropped to the ground and went into violent convulsions. Foam spewed from his mouth across [redacted] yard onto his prize rose bushes.

The kids screamed and Victoria, who was preparing a shepherd's pie for dinner, ran out the back door.

"By that time, smoke was billowing from my husband's ears," said Victoria, with a shiver. "I ran back into the house to call emergency rescue. But by the time they got to our home, it was too late. Geoffrey was dead."

Fortunately the deadly insect was still inside Audrey's peanut butter jar. Scientists from IDIE are now studying the bizarre bug.

"Usually fireflies are harmless," said Dr. Kincaid. "Their electrical charge is so minor you could touch a thousand at once and they wouldn't have enough power to hurt you.

"But this one is obviously different. The lightning bug, which we scientists have nicknamed Zeus, has enough electricity in its little body to light up New York City. From a scientific point of view, Zeus is the most amazing insect we've ever encountered."

Kincaid and his colleagues have many theories as to how an insect possessed enough voltage to kill a full-grown man.

"It may have been struck by lightning itself, and somehow survived the ordeal," speculated the scientist. "It may even be an unknown species bred in a remote area of Siberia, Africa or Asia that was trapped aboard a transport ship.

"Or it may be just one of those bizarre tricks of Mother Nature that make no sense at all."

The unusual discovery is no comfort to the widow or the dead man's children.

"Zeus doesn't deserve to live and attain such notoriety," said Victoria. "I should have squashed the little bastard when I had the chance."

After final report acknowledges U.S. was 'dead wrong' about Iraqi WMDs, Ed says . . .

I APOLOGIZE TO FRANCE — on behalf of America!

I'M MADDER than Napoleon Bonaparte with a mouse trap in the vest where he sticks his hand at all this French-bashing I keep hearing!

Mind you, [redacted] after a presidential commission came out with a final report saying the U.S. was "dead wrong" about Iraq having weapons of mass destruction.

Let's face it: The French were right all along. That tinhorn dictator Saddam didn't have so much as a decent Bowie knife — let alone nukes, by jimmy.

Well, as Pogo admit when he's wrong. And [redacted] that if "Hanoi" Jane Fonda is woman enough to finally admit she was an idiot for posing on that gol-darned North Vietnamese anti-aircraft gun, yours truly can allow as this time I was all [redacted] for calling the French yellow.

COPS PATROL 'BOARDERS'

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. — They patrol in cars. On motorcycles. There are even bicycle police. But in San Francisco the police force has unleashed a new kind of peace officer: skateboard cops.

"We've got to move with the times," declared a police department spokesman. "Criminal skateboarders are fast and unpredictable."

As a result, the San Francisco police department has created a special squad to pursue skateboarding felons. Called the Boarder Patrol, the seventeen officers have all been issued a standard All Terrain 6" white and blue board. Since they hit the streets three weeks ago, juvenile crime has dropped nearly 60 percent.

"Yo, the dude that ordered me was good," said purse-snatcher Barry T. "When I skateboarded over the bushes and did a roll-in down the hill, I thought I lost him. But that cop was with me the whole time."

The Boarder Patrol is also having an impact on serious adult crime.

"This bank robber came running from the Third National with a bag of loot. He was headed for the getaway car," said Officer Joe Bolton. "I skidded down a stair railing and did an axle grind on the guy, knocking him out."

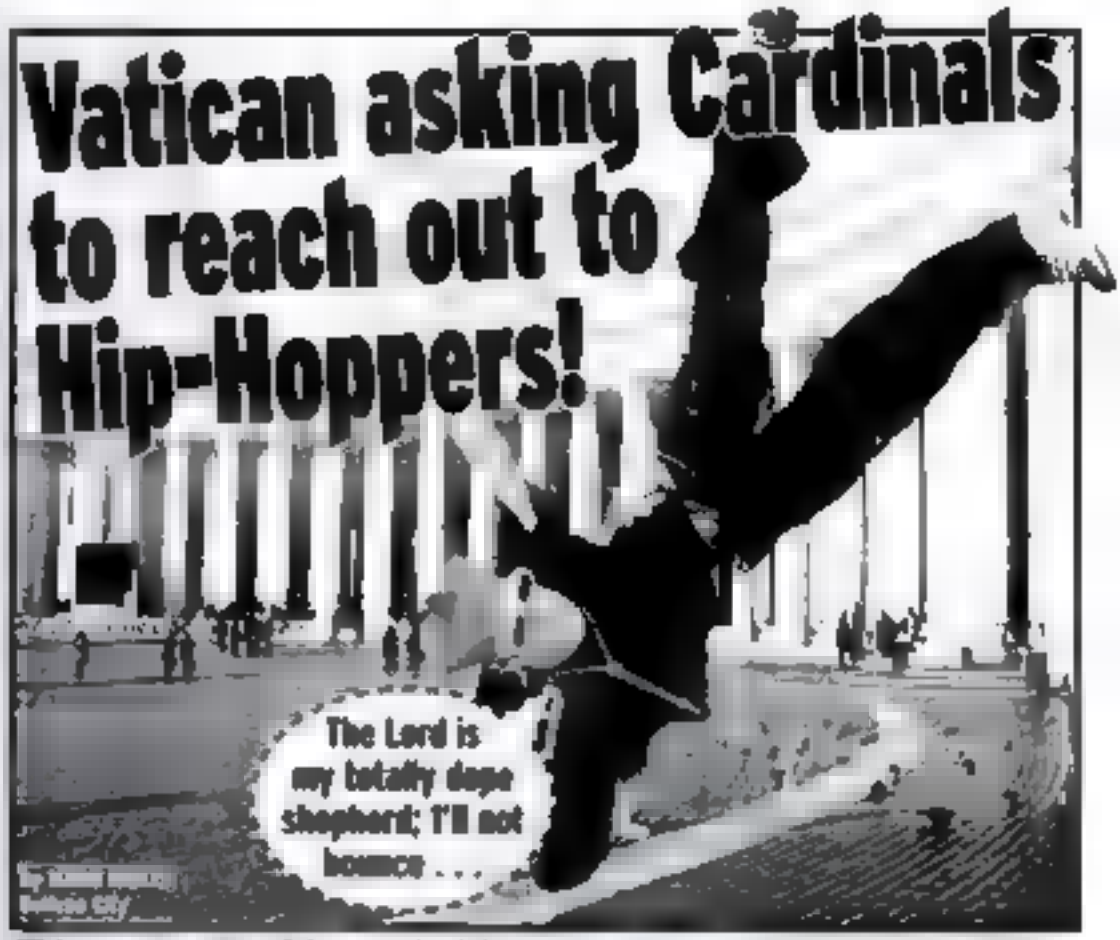
Vatican asking Cardinals to reach out to Hip-Hoppers!



In a continuation of the work begun by the late Pope John Paul II, the Vatican is asking Cardinals throughout the world to reach out to hip-hoppers.

"The Church realizes that its healthy future depends on attracting and keeping the young people in its fold," says Vatican spokesman Cardinal Bishop Roger Echeguray, 81. "If we're perceived as old-fashioned and out of step with the times, we'll lose the young people we have and won't be able to incorporate future generations."

"But if we can reach the most cutting-edge of these young people today — the hip-hoppers, these young people everywhere will realize the Church can be funky fresh, and to those young people I would say, on behalf of the Church, bad-yaa."

The campaign to reach out to hip-hoppers started in January of 2004, when Pope John Paul II presided over a performance of break dancers who leaped, flipped and spun their bodies to beats his hand after each dancer completed a move, then applauding for the entire group.

"For this creative hard work I bless you from my heart," he said.

The dancers planted the head on the inlaid marble floor of the Vatican hall and spun to loud applause from his group and from Vatican officials. Another performer during his body around on a series of spins and handstands.

"Artistic talent is a gift from God," John Paul commented.

"But now that the Pontiff has been called to God," states Echeguray, "it remains for the rest of us Cardinals to continue the mission to attract hip-hoppers to the Church. Vatican officials have outlined a three-step plan to reach out to hip-hoppers:

WARDROBE — Cardinals will be provided with new hip-hop clothing, including: Diamond studded sunglasses, a du-rag, a hundred sweat shirt, pant alligator belts with a silver dollar sign belt buckle. Fubu Nitro Tech athletic shoes and a blue blow pack down from which dangles a gold plated rosary.

LANGUAGE — Hip-hop versions of all major Catholic prayers will be provided to Cardinals. For example: "The Lord is my totally dope shepherd. I'll not bounce. The Dude makes me step off on fly pastures. With Him I be ballin'. He be totally def, dog. As we trip through I walk through this here world. Head filled wit snacks and honeys. I remain a player."

DANCE — The Cardinals will be provided with instruction in all the current hip-hop dances to enable them to hang out in the hippest clubs and approach potential churchgoers. Dances to be mastered include 'Hip Hockin', 'Chair Freeze', 'Back Stab', 'Brooklyn

MOST people have been abducted by aliens, say some UFO experts — the odds are you've one of them.

"Extraterrestrials possess the ability to wipe human memory clean," said Dr. J. Allen Longpeck, a UFO investigator from Houston, Texas. "You could be kidnapped again or twice a week and you wouldn't remember a thing."

But there are numerous signs that you've been taken aboard a spacecraft and examined, according to Dr. Longpeck. Here is a revealing excerpt from his upcoming book Did I Forget To Mention I'm An Alien?

WOMAN'S ENTIRE BODY TATTOOED WITH BIBLE QUOTES!

By MARK MILLER
Fayetteville, N.C.

SOME people clearly take religion more seriously than others, as evidenced by a North Carolina woman who has tattooed her entire body with quotations from the Bible! Vicki Carroll, 27, is known throughout her city as "that nut who has tattooed 95 percent of her body with biblical quotes dealing with the wages of sin."

'I saw Jesus' face in my bowling ball — and heard his voice tell me what I had to do!'

"I took a look at all the evil in the world," explained Carroll, "and I asked myself what I, just one person, could do to address this very serious problem. I thought about entering a convent. But that seemed a bit severe and I heard the food's not all that great."

Then, a religious vision came to Carroll in, of all places, a bowling alley.

"I had just bowled a strike. When I looked down at the ball after it returned, I saw that the swirling pattern on the surface formed a picture of Jesus giving the thumbs-up! As I stared, stunned, I swear I could hear a voice in my head, saying, 'Vicki, garth and adorneth thy body with tattoos condemning sin.' I was so stunned, I couldn't even play the rest of the game. I hadn't heard from Jesus since the night I gave my heart to Him at a tent revival when I was 12, and I wasn't sure I'd ever hear from him again."

Carroll went straight from the bowling alley to the nearest tattoo parlor and had them tattoo the biblical quote, "All have sinned and fall short of the glory of God" — Romans 3:23, down her right arm. "It was painful and felt very strange at first," recalled Carroll, "but just knowing I was fulfilling Jesus' wishes warmed my heart and made me feel I was doing the right thing. Plus, I got a lot of compliments on it."

The next week, Carroll returned to the tattoo parlor and had them put "No whoremonger[,] no unclean person hath an inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ and of God" — Ephesians 5:5, on her left arm. The week after that, she got "Evil companionships corrupt good morals" — I Corinthians 15:33, on her right leg, and "I will watch my ways and keep my tongue from sin — Psalm 39:1, on her left leg. "I realized I felt better, stronger, and more virtuous each time I got an additional tattoo," says Carroll. "I realized I was getting addicted to the Bible tattoos, although I couldn't help noticing that my dating life seemed to be suffering for some reason."

A year later, almost every inch of Carroll's body was filled with biblical quote tattoos, including her favorite, across her belly: "Put on the full armor of God, that you may be able to stand firm against the schemes of the Devil — Ephesians 6:14." TEXAS MAN STRIKES

HE GIVES FREE GAS TO HIS NEIGHBORS!

But instead of leasing [redacted] field to some giant [redacted] oil-rich fat cat, the down-to-earth ordinary Joe set up a tiny "mini-[redacted]" on his porch so he can provide free gasoline to his neighbors.

"I had an [redacted] lottery jackpot and all that money brought him nothing but misery — I swore that wasn't going to happen to me," explained Shurdell, 45. "I gas up my pickup once a week without ever having to leave home and I figure that puts me ahead of the game.

"A geologist from the university told me there's probably enough crude oil on my property to supply my family and all the other [redacted] gas for the next 12 generations. I expect by then, the rest of the world will have [redacted] using some other kind of energy — but my neighbors here in Alpine can count on still having old-fashioned gas to run their [redacted] enough for his incredible generosity — noting that the free gas has been a boon to the local economy. 'Money isn't everything — being a good neighbor means much more to me'

The amazing saga began on April 15, 1998, when Alpine, located in Brewster County, was rattled by a minor earthquake measuring just 3.8 on the Richter scale.

"A few dishes broke and the cat got spooked something awful, but it didn't do any real harm to the house. Afterward, I hardly gave it a second thought," recalled Shurdell.

But beneath Shurdell's dry, barren 4.5-acre property outside town, something extraordinary had happened. The quake had shifted the Marathon Basin, a vast, oil-rich region approximately 250 miles wide and 300 miles long underlying West Texas and the adjoining area of southeastern New [redacted]," explained geologist Bill Roberto Quintez. "The basin is the source of much of the oil extracted from Texas each year. UNIVERSITY scientists have discovered a bizarre new airborne life form that has evolved in smog and they warn it poses a potentially deadly health threat to all Americans.

"The government is [redacted] death and head games," explained environmental activist Dr. Henry Gelb, leader of the team that conducted the study funded by National Institutes of Health. "The obvious solution would be to cut pollution as much as possible and wipe these microorganisms out. But if the Environmental Protection Agency tries to invoke the Clean Air Act that would violate the Endangered Species Act.

"Destroying any rare creature's natural habitat is illegal — even if it's smog."

But the Bush administration also has political reasons for stonewalling the discovery.

"To announce that these microorganisms 'evolved' in [redacted] would [redacted] the administration's political base, the Christian right, which maintains that evolution is patently silly," said the scientist. "At the very least, White House policy officials deny everything — while working quietly behind the scenes to figure out a way to contradict or report this research."

Smog is a form of air pollution produced by sunlight interacting with hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides released into the atmosphere mostly from cars and factories. THE FUMES now escaping [redacted] Mount St. Helens in Washington state confirm what a leading researcher at Princeton's prestigious Institute of Taxonomical Studies has long suspected: There are a large number of giant guinea pigs in the hollow center of the earth.

Dr. Mensa announced the results of his research in the same New Jersey town where Albert Einstein used to live and work. DR. MENSA believes giant 900-pound guinea pigs live at the center of the Earth. This illustration compares the giant rodent to a rabbit.

they thought the strands belonged to vaporized deer and rabbits. The one problem with that theory: These hairs were each 10 to 12 feet long.

"We thought maybe they had been fused by the intense heat," Dr. Mensa said. "Either that or it was shed by a hairy boa constrictor."

"Volcanic gas can cause strange mutations," added the wid[redacted] Velikowski, who has spent a l[redacted] around active volcanoes and claims to possess X-ray vision.

When Dr. Mensa returned to his laboratory with the sample he discovered that the DNA perfectly matched the guinea pigs whose habits, brains and [redacted] ability he had been studying for [redacted]

"I couldn't stand the way he kept those cute little creatures in cages," said the former Mrs. Mensa, who briefly lived with chimp chef Pierre (Weekly World News, April 11). "And his notion that guinea pigs cause the earth to tilt[redacted] absurd. I won't tell you how he came up with the idea — but it's another reason I couldn't [redacted] to be with him!"

[redacted] Mensa declined to elaborate.

"She's a crazed fanatic and a very jealous woman," Dr. Mensa says. "I love my guinea pigs. I also love the [redacted] wheelbarrow my house and the five gerbils who share my bed at night."

Getting back to his revolutionary theory, Dr. Mensa has postulated that each of the titanic rodents weighs approximately [redacted] because it would crush their tiny feet and make them unable to waddle around, much less get up enough steam to keep the earth in motion."

With that as a baseline figure, Dr. Mensa computed that there are somewhere between 1,500 and 2,000 giant guinea pigs in the center of the earth.

"I figured this out by calculating the earth's mass and the amount of energy needed to move it," he explained. "The formula can be expressed as E=MC2 where E is the earth, M is its mass, and C2 is one hun-

Of course, the stress of moving the earth must take a toll on the giant guinea pig hearts. Dr. Mensa suspects that the life span of the giant guinea pigs may only be about two years, or half as long as that of a normal-sized pig.

"When these giant earth movers die, their comrades almost certainly tidy up by pushing them into the lava," the scientist says. "This would help to explain another natural phenomenon. Sometimes their bodies [illegible] might be eaten. Dr. Mensa suspects there may be tree-sized lettuce fields inside the earth.

"The lava-rich soil would be a perfect growing environment for super-big vegetables," he says.

All alone, with [redacted] help, no tricks of any kind, perform the [redacted] explanation: Actually [redacted] ideas, images, and words from someone else's mind right in your own head – as if you were reading the pages of a book!

Forget about [redacted] – your subject can be in the same room with you, chatting with you by telephone, or completely out of sight in a foreign country. You still can do it. Accept the unprecedented [redacted] proposal offered to you in the announcement – and I'll prove it to you.

I think I know EXACTLY what is on your mind right now.

You are quite intrigued. And most skeptical. You sincerely believe that [redacted] – unless you are a highly trained mentalist or a mind reader. It is absolutely impossible to do. That an untrained person can't really read anyone else's mind. From miles away? [redacted]!

You have every right to be skeptical. "Mind-reading" is usually performed by a "magician" or "mentalist" in front of a controlled audience on TV. We all know that such public demonstrations rely on some kind of special "training" or secret.

That what it's great entertainment – it's not something that can usually be done in the real world.

...As If You Were Reading A

The real thing – for use in REAL life – is what I am talking about – something that involves some skill and intuition. Like you, I was totally convinced that [redacted] wasn't something that could ever be done "off-stage" by an ordinary person.

At Last! The Revolutionary Technique That May Turn Fantasy Into Sheer Reality!

Something happened that converted me from a die-hard cynic into a fervent believer. The "Mind-Read" Manuscript crossed my desk.

As an entertainer I read many manuscripts. Yet this particular one caught my eye at once. I hadn't heard of the author. But that didn't matter. After checking him out, I found out he was highly gifted and intuitive – with a record of extensive writing in the field of extra-sensory perception.

His manuscript stunned me. Practically knocked me off my chair. Any lingering doubt I ever had about the "impossibility" of an average person mastering "mind communication" went flying out the window.

I just couldn't believe my eyes. Here it was, in black and white. Written in such [redacted] anyone could really understand. An easy-to-learn breakthrough technique to try to help an ordinary [redacted] or woman to read someone else's mind. Anytime. Anywhere. At will – without being a magician or mentalist!

A Technique So Powerful It Might Even Be Illegal!

My first inclination was to burn the manuscript. To destroy it entirely. In the wrong hands, it could be trouble!

Then I had second thoughts. Why should I be a censor? I believe in a free

MAN COMPLETES 25-YEAR-OLD DETENTION

By MARILYN MOFFORD

FORT WAYNE, Ind. — A boy who got caught pulling a cruel prank in high school has finally completed his detention — 25 years later!

"I deserved it," the 43-year-old Finkle admits today. "I guess I just pushed my teacher too far."

Although he graduated in May 1960, Finkle has been showing up at his old high school every day at 3:00 p.m. and staying two hours for detention. Finkle, who now works as an accountant, was not legally obligated to finish his detention, but he chose to do so anyway.

"It just felt like the right thing to do," Finkle says. "I did a lot of bad things in high school, and this was my way of making up for it."

Finkle's history teacher, Ronald Stedman, recalls, "That boy had been giving me guff all year. One day, he pulled a practical joke that went way too far."

The prank involved spreading tacks and super glue over the teacher's seat. "When I sat in my chair," Stedman remembers, "it was incredibly painful. But I couldn't get up because of the super glue."

After he was finally set free by having his pants cut off, an enraged Stedman ordered the record-setting detention. Now, 25 years later, Finkle's sentence has finally reached its end.

"People can't wait until they get home so they can stuff their clothes down their throats," says Bite Me owner Steven Silverstein, 44.

The fashion treats are the brainchild of Swedish-French master chef Nils Berri-DeBlow, who invented a remarkable new dough that can be shaped and baked into shirts, pants, lingerie, skirts, socks, blouses, dresses, sports outfits and stylish accessories that will not crumble when they're worn.

He's keeping the ingredients secret until his patent is secure.

But Berri-DeBlow assures consumers everything that goes into their outfits is healthy and delicious.

"I have a lovely tennis skirt and matching top that will hold up through a whole day at the country club," says Berri-DeBlow, "and even a nice selection of jogging pants."

The edible ensembles come in a wide variety of colors and flavors to fit every taste.

Patrons of Bite Me — which currently has an exclusive contract with Berri-DeBlow to market his invention — simply make their choices from a catalogue, and pick them up the next day.

"Last week, I made my first bridal gown," said the chef proudly. "It was absolutely breathtaking. When the bride walked down the aisle in her white flaky dress complete with cream filling, the guests gasped with surprise and delight.

"The groom told me later he very much enjoyed eating the dress off his new wife on their honeymoon — it added a uniquely romantic touch to the occasion."

The delectable don-and-devour clothing does take some getting used to, though. Self-discipline is a must.

MEDIA VOTES TO RENAME RELIGIOUS RIGHT 'RELIGIOUS WRONG'

Christian Coalition founder Pat Robertson

By MICHAEL PRESTON

WASHINGTON – Don't expect to hear the term "religious right" from members of the media anymore. Most major news organizations will soon be calling conservative Christians "the religious wrong."

"There's nothing right about them," declared a spokesperson for the Association of Liberal Reporters at a March 24 news conference.

"They're wrong on just about every issue, from evolution to gay rights. Why should they have an unchallenged monopoly on the word 'right?'

"They should count themselves lucky. The first proposal was the catchy phrase 'Christian crazies,' but it was voted down because members feared people would interpret it as a sign of bias."

Conservative Christians have been known by many nicknames over the years. In the 1980s they were called fundamentalists. But, when that word became synonymous with "ignorant bigots," many opted to instead be known as "born again Christians." When that, too, eventually became synonymous with ignorant bigots, the term "religious right" arose.

The new term will be introduced gradually, beginning in May, journalists say. A handful of news organizations are not expected to jump on the bandwagon, including the conservative FOX News Channel.

"Instead, they'll probably use the newest term conservative Christians have called for themselves, 'Americans with values,'" predicts journalism

Alien assist

A pilot took first place in a biplane race with an aircraft that supposedly ran out of gas half a mile before the finish line. It is rumored aliens intervened for the win.

One witness recalled Jim Berner's souped-up R3C-1 Land-Racer sputtering before the final bend, but a "miraculous burst of power suddenly jetted him past everyone else anyway."

Others attenders of the Spirit of Speed event in Topeka, Kan., had similar accounts, but Berner's crew denied the charges as "out of this world."

"There's no way," said chief mechanic Brad Murphy. "Jim won fair and square."

Interestingly enough, however, Berner's gas tank was completely dry after the race and finish line photos provided a fuzzy, but noticeable image of another being in the winning plane's backseat.

Eat your words

An Albany, N.Y., man devoured an entire dictionary in an attempt to become smarter.

Alan Slickstein, 55, claimed he did it because college never worked for him and he needed to find a easier way to absorb the information.

"If I eat it, perhaps I'll be able to digest it better," he told his sister, Lisa. She says she tried to talk him out of the literary lunch, but Slickstein continued to insist he was "starving for knowledge."

Slickstein's wife, Mary, was not home at the time of the meal, but neighbors reported seeing him sitting on the front porch with a large book and a bottle of Wite-Out.

Slickstein was rushed to the hospital after his wife found him, puffy and bloated, on the living room floor.

"He was processing it all right," explained head nurse Sally Abel. "But all that paper was entirely too much fiber for one person's system to handle."

After having his stomach pumped, Slickstein reluctantly admitted, "All I really learned was not to eat paper."

Y2K nuclear New Year's

The tiny, remote Scandinavian country of Finchen set off a nuclear bomb as part of their New Year's Eve fireworks show.

Government officials O.K.'d the blast believing the world's end was imminent, so there would be no further serious repercussions to the blast.

They were highly mistaken, however, as the world failed to end, but their celebration successfully leveled the entire 55-sq.-mile country. Luckily, no neighboring nations were affected.

Confidential documents recovered from the expensive wreckage revealed Finchen's president wanted "to shoot off the biggest fireworks show anyone in the country has ever seen."

He succeeded, but no one lived to tell of their incredible experience.

Newspaper printings stopped in mid-run after the explosion showed front page headlines that would have read: "Going Out With A Bang!"

Indeed. Finchen has since been removed from world maps and globes, and other countries with nuclear weapons, including

ST. LOUIS, Mo. – [illegible]-year-old Madison Hogan got tired of hearing her newborn baby brother cry at the top of his lungs in the middle of the night – so she invented a gadget that drowns out the sound.

"I can finally get my sleep at night," says the baby youngster's greatest mom.

The nifty device, which Madison calls the Baby Buster, works by emitting what's known as "white noise."

"The Baby Buster generates sound waves that balance out the sound waves that my little brother Zac sends into the air when he cries," Madison explains.

Only the high-pitched frequency of a baby's cries are affected – other sounds, such as music coming from a TV, can still be heard.

"It's perfect for a person who lives in an apartment with thin walls and whose neighbors have a newborn," observes Perry Whittlestein, editor of Inventions Monthly.

A company has purchased the rights to mass-produce the device, it was revealed, at a whopping $44,000.

She says: "My parents got most of it, like a college fund – however! But I got a brand new bike – and an even better science kit."

SLEEPWALKER BEATS PROSTITUTION RAP!

By MICHAEL FORSYTH
Auckland, New Zealand

IN AN ultra-bizarre legal drama, a devoutly religious church secretary was acquitted of charges that she moonlighted as a hooker — after a jury determined that she was sleepwalking at the time!

Tracy Milhouse, a [redacted] married, 34-year-old mom of two was found not guilty of prostitution — even though an undercover cop testified that she'd accompanied him to a motel room after accepting a wad of cash.

"Every night for at least three years, Mrs. Milhouse would rise from her bed, walk four miles to a seedy part of town and prowl the streets — while sound asleep," said defense attorney Brian Stevens.

"Usually she strutted around in a nightie and high heels, but sometimes she'd raid [redacted] her 15-year-old daughter's closet and squeeze into exercise [redacted] that fit like hot pants."

Surprisingly, pimp Roland Jankes said the dead-silent, glassy-eyed lady of the evening was his top earner.

"She was never rude or low-class like a lot of girls," he revealed. "The only problem was some johns complained that she snored during sex."

Shy, demure Tracy never suspected she was leading a nocturnal secret life.

"Sometimes I'd wake feeling a bit sore or with a funny taste in my mouth, but I thought I was imagining things," she said. "I'd also find money in my purse I couldn't account for."

Authorities estimate the attractive brunette, known by the street name "Luscious," [redacted]

The test, called a polysomnography, measures brain waves and other functions. It confirmed that the accused harlot was a sleepwalker, the expert testified in court.

"Contrary to popular belief, sleepwalkers don't just lurch about," Dr. Glass explained. "They've been known to drive, [redacted] are [redacted] amnesia.

"Eventually, it occurred to me she might be sleepwalking, but nothing I did roused her," he said, "even when I'd 'bitch-slap' her on [redacted] night."

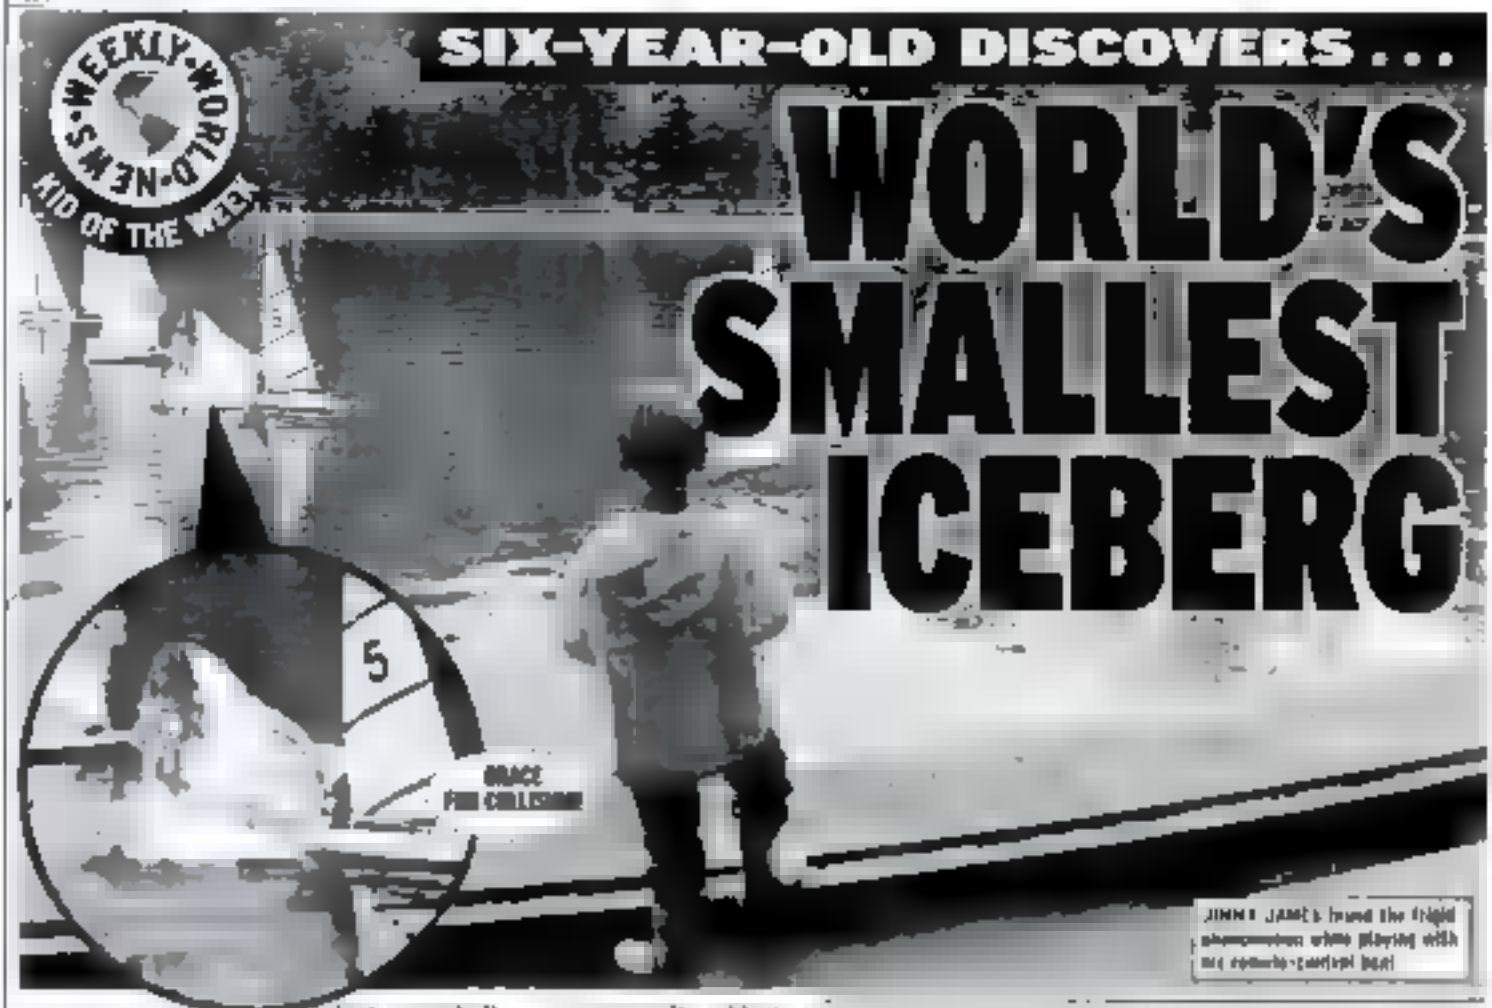
SIX-YEAR-OLD DISCOVERS . . .

WORLD'S SMALLEST ICEBERG



JIMMY JAMES found the frigid phenomenon while playing with his remote-control boat

By JESSICA DEBARNETT
Central Park, N.Y.

WHEN people think of an iceberg it conjures images of a mountain of ice. The largest known iceberg is 13 km long, 5 km wide, and 20 m high. (We don't know the metric system either, but that's big.)

Sailors know to avoid coming close to them. However, one sailor who did not was 6-year-old Jimmy James. He was steering his electric sailboat around a pond in the park when it accidentally [redacted] just a snowball floating in the water," he told us, sobbing. "My boat hit it and sunk."

The "snowball" was a tiny iceberg that had floated [redacted] river. It was 10 inches long, 8 inches wide, [redacted] 16 inches high. It apparently floated [redacted] a sewer drain and made its way to the park. A dead duck found floating nearby was apparently [redacted] victim.

We asked Professor Paul R. Bear of the Institute of Marine Unusualities on [redacted] Island if this was unusual.

"Very," he told us. "No iceberg has ever made it so far south without melting completely." How did this arctic wonder elude an unusually cold winter. Plus, water pollution has made icebergs as a whole harder than ever. We haven't yet retrieved this one from the pond but it appears to have components of oil, lead and plastic."

Some environmental activists insist on [redacted] back to the Arctic where it can lead a normal existence. That's why scientists have been unable to get their [redacted] on the little berger.

"I hope we can get beyond that because there is so much we can learn from this tiny phenomenon," Professor Bear remarked.

"Imagine ice cubes that don't melt in your drink or — well, I can't

Michelangelo's lawn art:

THE GNOME OF ST. PETER

By RAF FEVAL
Art Critic

FLORENCE, Italy – Michelangelo is one of the greatest artists in history. Among his most famous works are The Sistine Chapel ceiling, the Pieta, and the statue of David. All his works have something in common: great stature and classic beauty.

Or so we thought.

Hidden in the basement of the Vatican, historians have discovered what appears to be Michelangelo's last sculpture: The Gnome of St. Peter.

"We found the sculpture buried under old mixes and shavels," said Professor Don A. Tale of the Rome Museum of Marble.

"The gnome is about 2 feet tall. Wearing little boots, a hat, and a long beard. He is holding a lantern in one hand and a walking stick in the other. It was made from the same marble as Michelangelo's Moses. We're still trying to understand what would have compelled the artist to sculpt the Deliverer and then a tiny bearded dwarf."

Weekly World News tracked down Michelle Ann Theint, the great great great great great great granddaughter of Michelangelo to get her opinion.

"It looks a lot like Pope Julius II," she told us. "My great great great great great great grandfather did not have a good relationship with the pontiff, who used to break sticks over his back. Michelangelo probably made this as a Vatican lawn ornament.

"It was his way of telling people what he thought of the Pope."

Artistic discoveries of this magnitude are rare but not unprecedented. Just two years ago a farmer found the remains of Leonardo Da Vinci's very first

IMPLANT YOUR REMOTE CONTROL!

– and never search under sofa cushions again

By BECKY TODD
Tokyo, Japan

JAPANESE scientists have invented a television remote control as small as the head of a pin that can be implanted under the skin of a man's index

"It's a dream come true for all males," says Dr. Fuji Sajimoto, who devoted 10 years to creating the tiny device. "Never again will they have to get extremely aggravated and speak the horrible words: 'Where's my damn remote? I know one of you took it. I left it right here.'

DR. FUJI SAJIMOTO'S creation will change over the former

The Pointy works by sending electromagnetic signals to the television just like a regular hand-held controller. To change channels, all a man has to do is point up to go to higher channels and down for lower. When he gets to the one he wants, he simply stops pointing.

Pointy implanted in his fingertip.

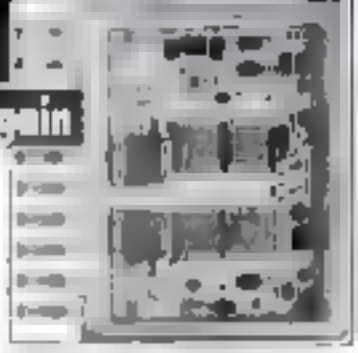
"I'll never go back to the old-fashioned remote control," says Bendell. "This is fantastic. Now I get home from work, drop into my recliner, pop open a cold one and start cruising the channels for the next 12 hours. And I'm in a great mood.

"When I had to look for that stupid remote, my blood pressure would go through the roof. I'd be pissed off and if enough time went by I'd start getting desperate."

Dr. Sajimoto says there are still a few small kinks he's working out.

"The Pointy is very sensitive and when the man is near the television it will go on even on those rare moments when he doesn't want to watch something," says the scientist.

"There's a small chance it could cause electric shock waves to travel up a person's arm and it's remotely possible that pieces of the hush-tech electronics can come loose, travel through the



THIS CHIP, embedded in your fingertip [illegible] gets to change channels at will.

"Oh, and it causes garage doors to go up and down sometimes."

Even with the risks, Bendell — and millions of other men who've been surveyed — are willing to undergo the implant.

"Yeah, I get shocked every now and then," he says. "But it's worth it. Now I start my evening television viewing relaxed and in a good mood. You can't put a price on that."

HONESTY FALLS TO THIRD AS 'BEST POLICY'

By JANE ANDERSON

WASHINGTON D.C. – Honesty, which has consistently come in first place for 73 years in polls asking Americans, "What is the best policy?" now ranks third, says a leading ethics researcher.

Thomas Sullivan, head of the prestigious Wachovia Ethics Institute in Washington, D.C., says that honesty now lands behind "getting ahead," and "free cable" as the best policy. "The good news is 'honesty' still lands ahead of 'lottery' and 'overeating,' but clearly 'honesty' is in a free-fall, popularity-wise," says Sullivan. "People these days don't see honesty as being that valuable.

"A student plagiarizes a term paper over the Internet and gets an 'A,' while the honest student who does his or her own work gets a C+, and they're left feeling like they got the short for playing by the rules.

"There's an old maxim about 'Honesty is its own reward,' but more and more, people don't see that in their daily lives.

"Sports stars do steroids, lie about it, and draw enormous salaries, while the honest player, who doesn't use them, sits on the bench or doesn't make the team altogether. Telling him that honesty is its own reward doesn't quite make it."

PEACE TALKS UNDER WAY BETWEEN ANGELS & DEMONS!

War between has left Hell

By MICHAEL CUSACK
Vatican City

ANGELS and demons have quietly entered into peace talks — and if all goes well, Heaven and Hell could sign a treaty normalizing relations within weeks!

That's the mind bending assertion of a leading theologian who has sources privy to the high stakes negotiations.

"Just a decade ago a peace pact between Heaven and Hell would have been unthinkable," says Mario Ongaro of Vatican City.

"But in this era, we've seen many implacable foes, like Great Britain and the IRA, sit down at the bargaining table to settle their differences.

"Of course, this won't be a issues — and there's a lot of bad blood and distrust."

It was reportedly Satan who first extended the olive branch, sending God the message, "Isn't it time to let bygones be bygones?"

"Satan's bunch was against the wall," explains Ongaro. "Hell is virtually bankrupt, due largely to corruption. The Evil One can't even afford to buy souls anymore. He simply doesn't have the money to fight Heaven."

Ongaro claims pre-liminary talks got underway six weeks ago between Earthly representatives of the two sides — with negotiators from the Catholic Church sitting opposite agents of the International Church of Lucifer.

between heavenly seraphim and second-tier demons in which key points of the peace plan have been hammered out," the theologian reveals.

"Vatican sources tell me next week is the first 'sit down' between the Archangel Michael and Satan's chief lieutenant Beelzebub.

"It's hard to picture them in the same room — these guys personally detest each other."

Known as the Lord of the Flies, Beelzebub is one of Hell's most vicious demons — infamous for violent possessions. But "only a hardliner" would have the credibility to forge peace, the expert observes.

The talks are being held on neutral ground, the Geneva headquarters of an atheist organization.

"The first session got off to a rocky start when an angel complained that a demon smelled 'like sulfur.'" Ongaro says. "A scuffle broke out."

According to Christian lore, the war in Heaven erupted eons ago when God ordered His angels to serve His latest creation — man. Jealous, a band of angels led by Lucifer rebelled. God triumphed and Satan's horde was cast out.

"Since then a cold war has [illegible]

Although details must still be worked out, here are some basic elements of the accord.

- Demons will swear allegiance to God. In return, they get back the ranks and angelic names they held before their fall from grace.
- Hell will be declared an "autonomous principality" of Heaven. It won't have full sovereignty, but they'll be able to make their own rules there," explains Ongaro.
- Demons will forgo possession of humans, although they'll still be allowed to chat with crazy people.
- No more purchasing of souls. But people who sin will still go to Hell.
- Better lighting in Hell. "The grim lighting has been described as 'darkness visible,'" observes Ongaro. "They'll also get indoor plumbing."
- Demons will be allowed to date human females. Explains Ongaro: "They've always lusted after our women. God's ban on such contact was another bone of contention."

Catholic officials refuse to confirm the report, but a Vatican insider verified that the negotiations are at a "delicate stage" now.

"There's been a lot of haggling," reveals the insider. "Satan's team keeps trying to sneak loopholes into the document while our side tries to catch them.

"This is truly a case where the Devil is in the details."

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – A new spaghetti sauce is so [illegible] that anyone who eats it immediately starts speaking fluent Italian.

The sauce, Papa Roma, is made in Rome, and has been available in the United States for a little over six months.

Angelino Rosario, who makes the sauce, says, "We use only the finest Italian ingredients. Italian tomatoes, Italian oregano, Italian garlic, Italian artificial flavoring. If it's not Italian, it's not in there."

The effects of the sauce last about six hours, before the person eating the sauce returns to speaking his or her native tongue.

Herb Schwartz, from Kansas City, where the sauce was first test-marketed, began speaking Italian immediately after eating a portion of spaghetti and meatballs topped with the sauce. Says Schwartz, through an Italian interpreter, "Before I tried Papa Roma's, the only Italian word I knew was Michelangelo. But the second I ate it, I don't know what happened. Suddenly I started sounding like Sophia Loren."

Says Kansas City police chief Harold Wilson, "I started receiving a lot of hysterical phone calls from the public. But I couldn't understand a word they were saying, because I don't speak Italian."

Once Wilson learned what was happening, he ordered one

LAWYER SUES HIMSELF FOR INCOMPETENCE

By BERNIE BYLE

ORONO, Maine – A lawyer who hasn't won a case in three years has filed a lawsuit of incompetence – against himself!

Barry Dolfin, an Orono personal injury attorney, says, "I've lost some cases this last couple years that a 5-year-old child could've won. They had cost me a ton of money in lost legal fees, as well as new clients, and . . . there was something else – Oh yeah! – My wife! She left because I wasn't making any money.

"Everyone in America likes someone when something doesn't work out the way they planned. Well, I have no one to blame for myself. Therefore, I have no choice but to file a suit against me."

Dolfin, 36, filed a suit against himself for $2 million dollars in damages. "If I opened a book even once during my four years in law school instead of partying my ass off every night, there's no doubt in my mind that I would be a better lawyer."

Ironically, some legal experts think that Dolfin's best chance is to lose the case.

"If a Catch-22, if he wins, that would prove that he's NOT incompetent," says Arnold Finck, a judicial expert. "So his best chance is to lose, proving he is incompetent, and then he win on appeal."

When Dolfin was asked how he expected to collect from himself if he won, he replied, "Oh, yeah. You see? I

TEACHER GETS INSIDE

INTERVIEW HEADLESS

FABLED VILLAIN TURNS OUT TO

By TERRANCE SHEARER
Sleepy Hollow, N.Y.

ONE OF the most frightening figures of folklore turns out to be neither legend . . . nor terribly frightening.

"I couldn't believe it," said Minnie Miller, a 10th grade English teacher. "The big, pil-[illegible]"

[illegible] ghost

Minnie, a 32-year-old teacher at nearby Knickerbocker High, had always been terrified by the Swedish pumpkin-throwing villain of [illegible]ington Irving's tale The Legend of Sleepy Hollow.

"As a [illegible] would always scream at my dad to drive faster whenever we crossed a bridge," she said, referring to the demon's inability to cross any kind of bridge. "Ten years of the[illegible]y and my own '[illegible]' — including two failed [illegible]s at alcohol rehab — didn't help cure me of my fear. So I decided to hunt down the source, the [illegible]-[illegible]-man himself."

[illegible] started her search where the author set his story, in this riverside [illegible] New York State. She didn't expect to find her quarry at the first place she visited, Moe's [illegible] and Grill.

"It was late in the morning," Minnie recalled. "Moe handed me my [illegible] and tonic and pointed out my quarry with a sad look. HE was seated at a small table in the back of the room. His pumpkin head was on the [illegible] next to him. He was slumped over [illegible]

"I walked toward him," Minnie continued. "I couldn't help staring and I and all. He [illegible] wearing an 18th-fashioned, blue jacket [illegible] double rows of brass buttons, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] into coarse, serviceable shoes. A red wool scarf was wrapped around his n[illegible]. There was nothing above the [illegible].

"[illegible] give autographs — " he murmured, the [illegible] from deep in his open throat.

"That's not why I'm here," I assured him.

" — or interviews," he added.

Minnie [illegible] her glass and sat at the table. "Can I get you a drink?" she [illegible].

"The beer is fine."

"It has no head," Minnie pointed out.

He chuckled. "What did you expect?"

That seemed to break the ice. Minnie set [illegible] him. "I'm not a reporter. I'm a schoolteacher and I only want to [illegible]."

"Don't let me stop you," he [illegible], rising. "I'm going to the [illegible]."

The demon rose slowly and shuffled to the men's room. Minnie turned back to the barkeeper and signaled for a refill. He brought it to the table.

"Is this what he does all day? Just sit here?" Minnie asked.

"Pretty much," Moe replied. "He tried working as a headhunter on Wall Street but every time he reached the George Washington Bridge he got the [illegible] gave that up and used some of the Hessian gold he'd saved to buy a pumpkin farm."

"Pumpkins?"

"Yeah," Moe said. "He goes through a lot of them. They rot

"Who?" Minnie asked.

"Mrs. HH."

"The Headless Horseman has

"What happened?" Minnie asked.

Moe shrugged. "One day she just didn't show up. HH later found out she lost her head for HH returned the kiss with a grand sweep of his hand he bowed to Minnie. "I'm heading off to my farm. I'm sorry to have wasted your time."

"Actually, you haven't," Minnie told him. "You've taught me a great deal."

"Glad to hear it," the Headless Horseman said. "Things didn't Right. I have no head for names."

With that, the Headless Horseman put on his head and cloak and left. Minnie declared a third drink "on the house." She also declined Moe's offer to work as a topless dancer.

"I was no longer afraid," she told Weekly World News. "After all

GUESS THE CHOOSE CORRECTLY – & IS THE BOGUS

W[illegible] like us print a fake story, we're making an exception for our [illegible] crazy [illegible] One of these five stories isn't real — see if you can pick which one and you could win a wh[illegible] $200! [illegible] the one you think is FAKE on the coupon, and mail it to us. We'll pick a winner [illegible] the correct entries. [illegible] knows, it might be you! Good Luck! Entries must be postmarked by May 11, [illegible]. Log on to weeklyworldnews.com and you can play the on-line [illegible], as [illegible] hot new game.

1. [illegible]D RANT

AN AFRICAN political science teacher has given the world's longest nonstop lecture – going on and on for over three days!

Errol Muzawazi, 80, of Zimbabwe, spoke for 88 hours and four seconds, mostly to himself. The majority of his audience at Jagiellonian University in Krakow, Poland fell asleep after the first few hours.

Guinness Book of Records officials monitoring the event say he was only allowed to break once a night to use the bathroom or eat a sandwich.

Muzawazi already holds the previous record for 82 hours and 30 minutes.

2. THE MILKMEN

A SURVEY has revealed [illegible] in three new fathers admits to trying their wife's breast milk.

Apparently men want to feel they are more a part of the breastfeeding process. And according to the 1,000 new dads polled, one-third have literally gotten involved.

Dr. Natasha Ilya, head of the study, says the findings aren't as creepy as they may seem at first. In fact, she's "encouraged to see that fathers are supporting their partners choice to breast-feed as breastfeeding is best for babies and provides many benefits."

3. MUSIC MAN [illegible]

A MAN who claims he can name any Top 40 hit since 1975 from only three bars of music has finally met his match.

During a world record verification, Richard Studmeyer, of Laurel, Del., faltered for what he says was the first time ever. The trivia nit? Eddie Murphy's "Party All The Time."

Murphy's one-hit wonder reached all the way to No. 2 in 1985, when Studmeyer was 28 years old.

"I can't believe I didn't get it," Studmeyer sighs. "How I totally remember making fun of Eddie Murphy for actually singing it. I can't believe I forget it."

4. PET PILLOWS

MISS cuddling with Fluffy?

Not to worry, a U.S. taxidermist has come up with a weird way to keep sleeping with your pets every [illegible] they're dead and gone – cushions made with their fur.

Jeanette Hall, 29, of Nevada, says although [illegible] shocked by her Pet Pillows, she's sold hundreds of the stuffings.

Owners simply send their dead pets' bodies to her, and she creates a soft pillow, fur on one side and fabric on the other.

Animal lovers are thrilled to be able to keep their [illegible] friends around.

5. BLIND [illegible] HOLE IN [illegible]

A LEGALLY blind golfer has accomplished what most people with perfect vision never will – a hole in one!

When Joel Ludvicek's golfing buddies told him he'd nailed the 168-yard hole at Twin Pines golf course in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the 78-year-old was naturally skeptical.

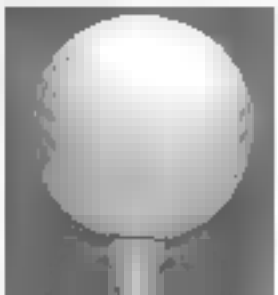
"They've said it before," Ludvicek jokes.

Except this time it was true.

His three partners helped him position the ball and aim his swing, but in the end, the lucky shot was all him.

"A big fluke," he says. "It's just one of those things."

Amazingly, this is Ludvicek's second hole in one.



$200 Congratulations to Carol Brewer of Peabody, Kan., who correctly identified [illegible] as the fake story.

"He's just a baby!" said Nick "The Pacifier" Nicolini, the family's alleged consigliere. "The kid can't even talk, other than 'Goo goo, gaga.' He's not pulling the head of My Little Pony in anyone's bed or having people knick knack paddy whacked."

"The Pacifier's feeding you poblum," charged D.A. Corrigan. "Sonny Giovanni is a ruthless little genius who's calling the shots — the gunshots, I mean."

Godbaby

LORD RULES WITH IRON RATTLE

Weekly World News has learned from informant Chuck E... aka "The Cheese," that the Godbaby is far from toothless. That became clear at his baptism. After being walked to the church in his bulletproof stroller, baby Sonny was surrounded by armed bodyguards dressed as cartoon characters.

At the end, when the priest made the traditional benediction gesture, the startled Godbaby began to wail. The preacher was immediately thrown to the ground and beaten by Bert and Ernie while the Teletubbies stood guard.

"And lord help the nanny who tries to put Sonny in his playpen," Chuck E. says. "Winky and Blinky come runnin'. That kid don't wanna be in any pen."

"So far the violence has been limited to the household," says D.A. Corrigan. "But we know that's only temporary. Wait until The Godbaby hits the terrible twos."

HOUSEKEEPER FIRED FOR USING FAMILY'S FLUFFY DOG AS A MOP

By DEBBIE [redacted]
New York, N.Y.

A [redacted]CH maid was [redacted]harged when [redacted]ng was discovered [redacted]using her employers' dog as a mop.

The Pointer family claims their 10-year-old daughter suffered permanent psychological damage after watching Prissy, her tiny, long-[redacted], plunged into a mop bucket and sloshed around the floor.

"Prissy started acting weird after we hired Claudette," says Miriam Pointer, 37. "She was still very playful and active, but she stopped waiting beside the tub while my daughter [redacted] a bath, something she'd always done. Every time we flushed the toilet, she'd run and hide. We didn't know what was wrong with her. Then my daughter saw Claudette and learned the truth."

The housekeeper doesn't deny using the dog for a mop, but insists there was nothing wrong with it. "She liked it," Claudette [redacted]. "She was always sniffing around at mop bucket, so one day I dunked her in it. She thought it was fun." Claudette claims that after the dunking, Prissy romped constantly while she mopped. "[redacted] would bark at te mop and chase it around, especially after I dunked her. So I just tipped her upside down and scrubbed the floor wit her. She thought it was a game. Her teeny little tail wagged as

[redacted] Pointers were incensed [redacted]. "Claudette deliberately traumatized the dog, which is [redacted] cupid[redacted] family goes everywhere our daughter goes, and now she doesn't even want her [redacted] in the bed with her. [redacted] says she's gross."

The Pointers have sued Claudette for animal cruelty and child [redacted]ve, and Claudette has countersued for wrongful termination. "They hired me to [redacted] floors, and did. They also expected [redacted] walk[redacted] and watch out for her while the child was at school. I loved that dog [redacted] it was my own, and everyone knows in French are dog lovers. Our dogs are part of the family and they do [redacted] that they can[redacted]."

"But that daughter of theirs wasn't right before I got there. She's a little brat who did her fair share of torturing that poor dog. You should see some of the horrid outfits she used to dress me poor thing in. But now she just ignores it. Acts like the dog's been rolling in poopie 24 hours a day."

[redacted] claims that while she used Prissy for a mop on the day in question, the daughter came in the room and started screaming and grabbing at the dog, throwing a monumental tantrum that sent the dog running under the bed. "We couldn't get the poor thing out, and the whole time the child was screaming her head off. I'm not the one that

CLAUDETTE claims Prissy enjoyed helping with the housework, and [redacted] silky coat made a very effective mop.

HONEYMOONERS FROM THE FUTURE ARRESTED!

By MAURICE MORRIS
Niagara Falls, N.Y.

JOYCE and Beth Hargrove, a lesbian couple, were arrested last week when they tried to pay for their Niagara Falls honeymoon suite with what appeared to be counterfeit money.

"But that wasn't funny money they were passing," admitted embarrassed Assistant District Attorney Genson [redacted]. "It was just money that hadn't been printed yet."

It turns out the newlyweds are from the year 3195. And if it weren't for the mistake of an antique dealer in the future, the couple's presence would never have been detected.

"Getting local currency is usually the last thing we do," said Joyce. "When we decided to come back in time we went to Past Due, a money changer, and bought what we thought were $100 bills from 2006. Unfortunately, the dealer was a little dyslexic."

Instead, he gave the couple suite," said Edmund Newberry, 84, owner of the bed-and-breakfast where the couple stayed. "They were giggling, holding hands, and obviously in love. I didn't care that they were a same-sex couple. I just thought they were Canadians. They didn't have credit cards but they were only staying for one night so I figured, 'What the heck!'" At check-out time they paid using bills with a picture of Dick Cheney. I told them to go have their complimentary breakfast — and I called the feds."

The FBI arrived within minutes. They arrested the girls and checked the lovebirds' luggage. There, they discovered how the newlyweds made the trip through time.

Hanline, who was called to investigate the units. "You attach it to your feet and literally jump from one time stream to the next. I actually spent four years studying it, then jumped back from 3008 to 'today' to give the FBI my report. I also had some tips for my stockbroker."

Weekly World News met the two attractive young girls at a pizza parlor, which is where they went immediately after their release from prison. They explained there is no cheese in the 22nd century.

"The FDA found out that dairy is bad for us," Joyce said as she ordered a pie with double cheese. "In fact, time travel was invented so that people could enjoy banned items like butter, caffeine and Seinfeld reruns."

The girls went on to reveal health care, and the fact that same-sex marriage is legal everywhere in North America but Texico.

"Texico?" we asked.

"The big country that stretches from Oklahoma to Guatemala and is ruled by Queen Jenna III," Beth said.

"After President Schwarzenegger lost his bid for a second term to President Winfrey, attitudes toward gay couples changed," Joyce told us. "There are now gay American Presidents and even an openly gay king of England."

If the future is so advanced, we wondered why the couple came back in time instead of visiting another planet.

"In our era, earth's waterfalls have all dried up because of global warming," Joyce told us. "We wanted to see what the Niagara Cliffs looked like when there was water."

"We weren't disappointed," Beth added. "In fact, our only frustration was that other honeymooners kept staring at us. You've got an awesomely beautiful world. People should appre-

PANDA-MONIUM!

GIANT PANDA CAUGHT IN 'LOVE NEST' WITH FARMER'S WIFE!

By DICK SIEGEL
Watson, Ill.

IN ONE of the most bizarre love trysts in recent memory, local farmer Bill Loach, Jr. has filed for divorce from Betty, his wife of fifteen years. What makes it strange is the individual he has named as a correspondent in the proceedings: A giant Chinese Panda bear named Andrew Joshua Panda.

"Don't that just churn your butter?" said the anguished man. "My wife ditched me for a big black and white. And I'm not talkin' about a smokey, like my first wife left me for. I mean a freakin' panda."

"I know that sounds absurd on the surface," said Betty's attorney Jude Humberton Clampett. "Okay — it sounds pretty absurd from top to bottom. But according to noted zoologist Dr. Desdemona Morris, pandas and humans are very closely linked. They have similar thumbs and get runny noses when they've got colds. Pandas are also very affectionate creatures and extremely well-versed in the art of love. It is perfectly natural that a woman of Betty's sensitivity would fall for a — uh, a 'hunk' like Andrew."

Bill ordered another beer with a bourbon chaser. "So I started hollering 'round the old woodshed and the next thing you know we're in the furniture business. We thought that adding a line of bamboo chairs and swings for the beach set would be a good idea.

And since we had all this farmland we figured, 'Why not just grow our own bamboo?'

"Consarn it, all I wanted to do was give my better half a better life! How could I know those bamboo sprouts would sow the seeds of our destruction?"

The large, burly farmer broke down in tears. "Everything was fine until that big furry Casanova came along! Endangered species my butt! I'll endanger him!"

Bill angrily fondled his 12-gauge shotgun. He cradled it in his tanned, muscular arms the way he used to hold Betty. I took it away from him.

The Loach farm became something of a trailblazer in the art of bamboo farming in the continental United States. Rare fertilizer was imported from Dung Yip in mainland China and seedlings were sent from Lumpau Kiel, Malaysia. Within 6 months the bamboo shoots were as high as a panda's eye.

[illegible] reached the Cincinnati Zoo's resident Endangered Species giant, Dr. Kathleen Costello. The zoo had recently acquired a giant panda and Dr. Costello suggested that she bring Andrew by on the way back from the airport.

"Pandas don't like to fly," she said. "Some part of their sweet but primitive brains tell them it is not a natural thing to do. I thought it would be good for him to see something familiar — comfort food."

Betty Loach was thrilled with the idea of having a panda visit the farm.

"Growing up outside of Chicago, we always got Chinese takeout from Panda Pandowdy," she recalled. "I would always eat vegetables and look at the designs on the wall and pretend I was a member of a panda colony."

When the big day arrived, Betty watched with fascination as the Chinese bear grazed among the delicate plums of her field. Soon she was feeding him, teasing him, tossing him treats by grasping her in a great, big bear hug, squeezing her ever tighter — his prickly black and white fur against her weathered but still-desirable farm-wife flesh.

"In just one afternoon they had become uncommonly fond of one another," Dr. Costello observed. "I thought at first it was the jet lag talking. I was wrong. During a break in their frolic I saw Andrew sit calmly, his great arm around her, as she clipped his prodigious toenails. Later, they lay together looking up at the sky. Andrew actually seemed to chuckle as Betty picked out clouds that looked like the Chinese provinces."

shakily twisted open a bottle of Valium, downing half it's contents.

The morning after Andrew Panda left the Loach farm Bill Loach awoke — not to a breakfast of prunes and grits but to a hastily written note scribbled by Betty on a TV Guide cover. It read: "Bill my darling, I have discovered true love, true passion. Not with you, I mean — with Andrew. We didn't plan it but goodbye and God bless. Follow your dreams as I have embraced mine."

An hour later volunteer firefighters were summoned to the Loach farm as pillars of flame and

"Mrs. Loach broke into the zoo before it opened and convinced Andrew to go with her," Dr Castello says. "He didn't leave us a note — just the smashed bars of his habitat and the broken body of a Himalayan raccoon that tried to stop him."

About two hours later, photographer Osgood Peabody accidentally stumbled onto the love nest of Betty Loach and Andrew Panda. He had pulled up to a soda machine at a Super 8 motel just propped back up," the alert shutterbug said. "I went to investigate."

After he snapped his award-winning Weekly World News photographs, Peabody was rushed by the great panda in full-Russell Crowe mode. While Andy's bear lover jumped beneath sheets that were covered with Honey Nut Cheerios, the panda smashed the lens and slashed away at the hapless photographer.

"He hates being photographed when he mates," Betty said later, defending her lover's actions. "Tourists and zoologists used to do it all the time in Kenya."

EMS worker: "Fortunately, the memory [illegible]. If [illegible] pays for the camera I won't press charges."

Peabody told us the last he saw of the couple they were barreling down Route 66 in a beat up Chevy Nova.

"Truth is, I was just doing my job and Andrew was just doing his," Peabody says philosophically. "I don't bear him any ill-will.

"Well I do," Bill Loach said as he slid from the bar stool to the floor. He laughed. "Anyway, the joke's on Betty. Technically, a panda's not even a bear. It's a [illegible]
